MUSEUM HISTORY

Founded in 1913 by Dr. Cephas Bard, a Pennsylvania doctor who came to Ventura after the Civil War, the Museum has evolved and transformed significantly over the past 100+ years. Originally housed in the Ventura County Courthouse (now Ventura City Hall), the Museum moved twice, expanding its collection to incorporate art, agricultural equipment, as well as memorabilia of all types, marking the passage of the eras in Ventura County.

MVC, the oldest nonprofit originated in Ventura County, currently occupies two buildings in Ventura and Santa Paula. The Ventura campus includes permanent and changing exhibit halls, a children’s garden, an historic courtyard, an events pavilion, and the Research Library which houses the county’s archives and many rare historical collections. In Santa Paula, the Agriculture Museum, with three galleries and a garden, tells the story of one of Ventura County’s biggest industries.

MVC is currently enjoying a new-found revitalization. Since January of 2018, the Museum has had 40 exhibits, hosted 137 events, lectures, films and receptions, increased membership, increased visitors to the Museum, and heightened relevance for past, current, and future patrons.

This growing vitality and vibrance are a product of the Museum’s commitment to an exciting 5-year plan spanning 2018-2023, a plan supported by six pillars for long term success, visibility, and relevance.

EXHIBITS

The Museum of Ventura County proudly presents a diverse range of exhibits that engage and explore current and emerging trends as experienced through the events, artists and artifacts that shape our culture and community over time. Our exhibits encourage the audience to participate in telling their stories through interactive elements and collaborations.

THE LIBRARY COLLECTION

The Library houses over 150,000 resources pertaining to the history of Ventura County and its outlying regions. The Library is currently working to digitize its collections in order to make them accessible to anyone, anytime, anywhere.

The Museum houses County newspapers, with 13 titles depicting the history of the county, outlying regions, and evolution of the region’s newspaper industry since 1851. Our collection contains over 39,000 image prints and negatives, daguerreotypes, cyanotypes, tintypes, albumen prints, and glass plate negatives, 2,300 slides, and 750 reels of microfilm.

The MVC collection has a vast collection of maps of diverse types, many of which are unique and hand drawn.
In early March 2020, due to the COVID-19 closures, the MVC Education Department transitioned from our traditional educational programming in-person at each Museum site to an experience offered entirely on the Internet. These “Virtual Learning Modules” are designed for teachers, parents and children staying “safer at home” during the pandemic.

These learning modules contain original MVC and Agriculture Museum lessons, activities, and other suggested online resources. Learners are offered activities to participate in at home and during outside learning experiences (with a consistent safety message that all “Slow the Spread” guidelines must be adhered to).

The MVC education dept. is sending out a regular e-newsletter to teachers who have participated in our field trips, and those who have signed up with us since the COVID-19 shutdown. We have also added Ventura County Office of Education (VCOE), Ventura Unified, and other district staff to our list-serve.
